

America's unease

Liangjie Cao

April 23 2018

Recently we know that Vladimir Putin was elected to be the president of Russian once more . That means America government is still unprepared for another Russian attack on the vote . Putin has been on power for nearly 20 years , and he is still be adored by the Russian . Because the middle election of America will come soon . They are afraid of what Putin would do if the Kremlin launched an even more aggressive interference campaign than the one that roiled the 2016 presidential race .

Actually , some of the states use paperless machine to vote . With the development of technology , the security should be strengthened . Having paper-friendly machines is hardly enough. Paper trails enable state officials to run statistically sound post-election audits of vote tallies. Yet only a handful of states require rigorous audits, with only a handful more considering them.

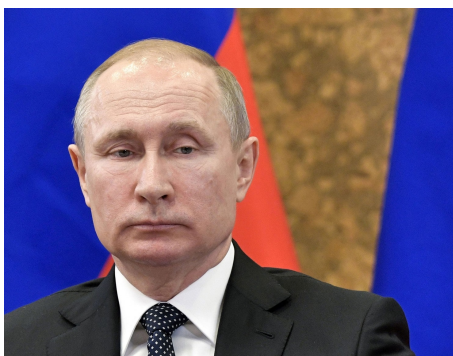

Figure 1: Russian President Vladimir Putin in Moscow on April 10. (Alexey Nikolskyi/Sputnik/Kremlin pool/EPA-EFE/Shutterstock)

To be honest,the surest way to secure the nation' s elections is to deter attacks in the first place. On this, the country is perhaps the most behind . The newspaper said Mr. Trump' s continuing fixation on appeasing Mr. Putin may lead the Russian government to believe that it would face few serious consequences for again interfering in U.S. elections . Though we can't predict what Putin will do next .

1

---

<sup>1</sup>The Washitonington Post